ROME, N.Y. — The Air Force Research Laboratory's Information Directorate has awarded a $1,478,923 contract to Adroit Systems Inc. of Alexandria, Va.

The two-year contract, "Advanced Technology Master Caution Panel (ATMCP)," is designed to enhance monitoring of system status at air operations centers.

"Adroit Systems will provide technology to enhance system status situational awareness capability for the Air Operations Center," said Elizabeth S. Kean, program manager in the directorate's Information Systems Division.

"This capability will allow the Joint Air Operations Center staff to monitor the health status of all command and control resources in the center," said Kean. "If a critical event occurs, for example, a computer goes down or an application fails, this can adversely affect many different operators in the center. The ATMCP will determine who is affected by the failure, notify those affected, and provide suggested courses of action to fix the problem or work around it until a fix can be developed."
